> Philip had such a flattering way of expressing himself in looks-while his quiet, respectful manner was especially approved by the self-sufficient young lady. He was very good-looking, too; at least six feet high, with deep, hazel eyes that, when he was pleased or excited, were lit up with a bright glow; but he would have been scarcely more at ease in dancing than one of his own cows, and although he harmonized very well with the surroundings of a farmer's life, he would have been decided- poor man any better than he would suit ly out of place in that hall of eloquence me. that was always floating through Clara's several years seniority had given her a complete influence over him, and she looked with no favorable eve upon the progress of affairs between him and Clara. She was fortan ately ignorant of that young laday's peculiar views; and cherished an idea which, in her expressive language, found vent in the words, that 'all the girls around were ready to throw themselves at Philip's head.' She now and then conjured up a sort of myth who was to b Philip's wife'-a pale, meek, little woman, who would bake, and brew, and churn according to directions, and not presome to say that her head was her own if Miss Sally claimed the possession. Still, she preferred reigning without a subordinate; and was very well satisfied that Phimeral satisfaction. Mr. Ledsted lip seemed disposed to defer the evil day.

One bright, October afternoon, Clara took her sewing, and went over to sit awhile with Miss Sally Norham. It was an unfortunate visit in every respect. Miss Sally was engaged in the congenial occupation of filling a feather bed; and Clara's modest lifting of the great, brass knocker brought, from an upper window, the end-fashioned house, and considered couraging question of,

Then in a louder tone, she added, 'Well, I don't know how on airth you're goin' to get in, unless you crawl through the winder. I that she ordered things entirely can't leave these ere feathers.'

Clara replied with a pleasant laugh; she was not unamiable, and disposed to make full allowance for Miss Sally's peculiarities and house-keeping duties; so, telling her not to trouble herself, which elicited house in perfect order, he took no from the cross spinster a grunt, which dinquiring into the house-keeping | seemed to say that she would like to catch herself at it, Clara walked around to the back of the house, and Miss Sally returned to her feathers, devoutly boping that she wouldn't get in.

But Clara was well acquainted with all the modes of ingress pertaining to the building, and scrambling through a small and all the week-old movements of window, she seated herself in 'the keepnate and Congress. She pored over ing room' to await Miss Sally's entrance.

The look that accompanied this remark was more expressive than the words, and Clara felt completely roused.

She entered the spacious kitchen, and went as systematically to work as though she had always been accustomed to it; the blaze of the bright fire she had kindled was quite cheering on a chilly. October eveningthe kettle was suspended-and as there were only two of them, she concluded to set the table there. She sang cheerful snatches of song, as she went about her work, and appeared to have driven Miss Sally entirely from her mind.

Now it so happened that Philip Norham, on his way home from a cattle-show, passed very near the kitchen-window, and attracted by the bright aspect of things, he paused and looked in. The kitchen had never looked so pleasant; but what was his astonishment to see Clara, herself, flitting around amid household duties with the air of one quite pleased with her voca-

He thought she had never looked so lovely: suppose that it was his kitchenthat she was his-and that it was his supper she was preparing? The longer he gazed, the greater his desire to go in; and, at length, reflecting that he was arraved in his best clothes, he fully persuaded himself that the critical moment had arrived-he was about to stake all his hopes upon the single venture of 'popping the question.

Clara received him very calmly; and having concluded her arrangements, seated herself in one of the kitchen chairs with the air of an empress. Poor Philip felt direfully confused-it seemed to him as though Clara had been suddenly placed on some great height to which it was almost impossible to look up, and he certainly made a very awkward business of it. When he had said the very thing that he had no intention of saying, and felt painfully conscious of having acquitted himself miserably in the eyes of her whose approval was his greatest happiness, he sat like a criminal awaiting his sentence.

Clara told him that she respected him very highly-that she had no doubt he had the power within him of becoming a great man-that she considered herself very unfit for a farmer's wife-and that she was now consulting his true interests by declining his proposal. She advised him to apply himself to study; and felt quite sure that in the pursuit of fame he would soon forget her.

And Clara glided gracefully out of the room; while poor Philip walked home. feeling more bewildered than he had ever felt before. He could not go into the house vet : so he turned into the lane, and went toward the barn. A favorite cow stood waiting for an opportunity to reach her shed; and as Philip let down the bars for her, he stroked the animal's neck, and said, half absently,

· You don't 'advise me to forget you, do you, Brindle ?"

Brindle answered with a characteristic 'Moo,' which was quite as much as could without any definite purpose.

> Philip sighed drearily as he retraced his steps-everything was altered with him now. His sister was coming from the cow-yard with two pails full of milk, and he hastened toward her. He felt as if he wished to relieve his full heart by being helpful to every one; but Miss Sally repulsed him with a characteristic jerkgiving vent, at the same time, to the expressive remark that 'she wasn't made of white satin! A mistake that no one could possibly indulge in for a moment.

> When they were seated at the tea-table Miss Sally informed her brother that 'that saucy minx, Clara Ledsted, had been there -watching for him, like enough !- but she did hope that he didn't think of marrving her?

' No,' said Philip, gloomily, 'I don't. 'I am glad of it!' returned his sister, she is no more fit for any sensible man than a pullet is to chop wood. Those hands of hers ought to have been pincushioned-and I'm sure I felt enough like stickin' pins into 'em to-day!'

But Philip said that he was not ver well, and soon went up to his own room while Miss Sally was so delighted at the turn of affairs, that she meditated a housecleaning jubilee the very next day.

Clara stood at her window, and wonder ed what made her gaze half-sorrowful after a retreating figure; but then she said to herself: 'No! I never could be satisfied to live on in that hum-drum way, and make bread and stitch my husband's shirts-I am intended for better things,' So she said that her destiny had impelled her to refuse Philip Norham, and went back to her father's supper.

The winter months had commenced and Clara Ledsted suddenly made the dis covery that the country was a very dull place. An acceptance was written to the of en-repeated invitations of a city cousinpapa's well-filled pocket-book was some what lightened-and having deposited an accommodating aunt in her place. Clara departed in the full hope of meeting with some of the heroes who had thronged her

The cousin pronounced her perfectly presentable; and Clara stood, one evening, pefore a mirror in the drawing-room, ar ayed for her first ball. She was dressed o the last pin before her more experienced cousin thought of commencing operations; and she now ran into the dressing-room to survey herself at leisure.

Very well satisfied did she feel with the investigation. Her white crape dress floated gracefully around her, and a wreath of pink rose-buds rested lightly on her bright brown curls. She advanced to the mirror and smiled. Then she retreated a little, and frowned. She was bewitching. dignified, and supplicating by turns; and she could scarcely decide which expression became her best. She practised the waltz that her cousin had taught her, and moved about as gracefully as a sylph. When she had finished, she joined her hands in an attitude of entreaty, and, with head slightly bent, stood before the mirror, as if waiting the plaudits of an auditory.

A low laugh greeted her ear. Now these various manœuvres, although perfectly innocent in themselves, were deidedly embarrassing in the presence of pectators; and Clara sprang from her 'atitude' to encounter the laughing eyes of a handsome, young officer.

It was to be a military ball; and this was the splendid-looking escort about whom her cousin had been going into ecstasies of admiration. A flashing of epaulettes, black eyes, gilt buttons, and white teeth seemed all mingled together; and without stopping to return his respectful bow. Clara rushed up stairs in a paroxysm of mortification. She could sca cely command herself when, later in the evening, her cousin introduced her to Lieutenant Pearsall; but the officer evidently thought her vanity very pardonable, and hastened to engage her for the first quadrille with the greatest eagerness.

Poor Philip would have been puzzled o recognize his farm-house beauty in the brilliant belle of the ball ; and Clara quite forgot that she had not been accustomed to such things all her life.

Lieutenant Pearsall was decidedly in love, and made an impetuous offer of his hand and heart on their way home from sider it; but even while she spoke, she ing as usual. contrasted his elegant manner with Phil- Philip was courted by his associates, and displeased at having folks placed over and rejeiced that Philip was safe.

Years rolled slowly on, and brought their usual changes. Since that eventful evening, Philip Norham had made the discovery that, beyond the knowledge necessary to manage a moderate sized farm, his stock of information was alarmingly small. He remembered Clara's words; 'You have within you the power of becoming a great man,' and althouth she may have forgotten them as soon as uttered. they retained a deep hold upon Philip's mind. True, he often laughed at the utter fallacy of the idea when he remembered all; but, while poring over his books. he loved to fancy himself toiling for some bright goal in the far distance.

Miss Sally thought it 'foolish,' thi bookmania, and decidedly vetoed Phillip's oft-repeated visits to the city in quest of treasures; but these were now his dearlybeloved companions, and the business of the farm fell almost entirely into the hands of his active sister. This was Miss Sally's natural element: and while she strided through the high grass in Phillip's boots, chasing refractory chickens, seeking for eggs in impassable places, and often driving a procession of cattle, her brother was lefundisturbed in his retreat.

The more that Philip learned, the more conscious did he become of his ignorance; and the more surprised at his presumption in having considered himself the equal of Clara Ledsted. Philip's altered views were perceptible in his demeanor; and the neighbors began to regard him with respect and admiration. But his added knowledge was not accompanied by selfconsciousness; and never had Philip Norham been so much lored as now, when Time had slightly silvered his hair and cast over his face the mellow radiance of fruitful autumn.

He had never married; and so persever ingly avoided all associates but men that the belles of his native village had quite despaired of vanquishing so impracticable

At last, Philip's neighbors sent him Congress. He had shrunk from the hone distrustfully, at first; but as time showed him his own powers, he listened to the persuasion of friends, and was successful. A bright galaxy of beauty was assembled at the first effort of the 'speaker from Massachusetts.' Philip's sojourn at Washington had introduced him to those leading spirits who are essentially 'the bone and sinew of the land;' and as they marked the frank, independent bearing, and quiet consciousness of reserved power in the nev representative, they saw the rising of

As Philip east his eve over that crow of fair women and noble men, a host of old recollections almost overpowered hir as he thought of Clara, and how she would have sat there had they both been as they once were. No matter what he spoke about-whether it was the Maine Liquor Law, or the Abolition question; his speech was manly, eloquent, and enthusiastic; and as his fine eyes kindled, and his tall figure dilated with fresh dignity, many bright young dreamer, like Clara of old created him a demi-god and fell down and worshipped. It was the eloquence of a Cincinatus fresh from the plough; and Philip's pale cheek was deeply flushed as he resumed his seat.

A pair of splendid eyes had watched every movement of the speaker; and when he sat down, the owner turned to answer the badinage of her companions.

'Really, Mrs. Keywood,' exclaimed voice from behind a dark moustache, 'you will be answerable for overstocking the market with eloquent farmers, for such glances as these are enough to kindle one into following the plough at a moment's

She smiled and made some laughing reply; but the most observant noticed that a cloud passed over her face, and her eyes followed the speaker.

He was presented to the brilliant Mrs. forever. the pleasure of conversing with an intellihe was the lion of the capitol, and on the very eve of marriage to a rich widow.

Let us see what has became of Clara. Her officio-husband enjoyed his happi ness but a short time; and when he died Clara regretted him not as one to whom she had been tenderly deroted, but as one who had been tenderly devoted to her .-Captivated by her beauty at first, he soon learned to respect the unerring tact and good sense which seemed to bind over and secure his admiration into enduring love. Clara was young and inexperienced when she married; she sometimes thought of Philip half regretfully, but then she remembered that she never could have sunk into the unvarying routine of so tame an existence; Lieutenant Pearsall was gentlemanly and refined, and had seen much of the world; under his guidance Clara repaired many of the defects in her early education, and the few years of their married life were uninterruptedly happy.

Jacob Ledsted died very suddenly, soon after his daughter's marriage; and the old place was sold and occupied by strange owners. Clara had, now, no tie to her native place; and as she never went back, all trace of her was lost. On the death of her husband, she found herself possessed of a small independence that enabled her to take up her permanent abode in the city. She was still young, and far more lovely than when she disdained the admiration of a plain farmer.

pired, the beautiful widow became all the rage; and having been a number of times besieged to that effect, she listened to the persuasions of Hiram Keywood, Esq., whose age more than doubled her own. and assisted him to diminish the contents of his overflowing coffers. Some people wondered if she would have married him divested of his surroundings : but these very people bowed low as Mrs. Keywood's splendid grevs threw dust in their eyes. and considered themselves highly honored

When Mr. Keywood died, his widow's position was the envy of her numerous circle of acquaintances. But she left them all and went off to Europe ; spending years in foreign travel that enlarged her ideas, and developed the many talents that had scarcely shown themselves in girlhood.

She was beautiful, accomplished, wealthy; and although twenty years had now passed since she laid aside the name Clara Ledsted. Time had touched her lightly that no one would have guessed the years she had really numbered. Mrs. Keywood's admirers called her 'plump'her detractors pronounced her 'fat;' and, if the truth must be told, there was little resemblance to the slight, girlish-looking Clara of former days. But her movements were so graceful, her bearing so dignified that none but the malicious would have hinted at an undue proportion of flesh and the widow, herself, carried off her allowance of pounds very lightly. Her brilliancy reminded one of the gorgeous-hued flowers of the tropics; and wherever she went she carried all captive before her.

It was thus that she met Philip Norham, after a separation of twenty years; and so much had he changed in the interval that it was by the name alone she recognized him. Her feelings upon this occasion were more tumultuous than she cared to acknowledge: and, for the first time, it struck her that she really loved him. She felt provoked at herself, and tried to call back her emotions like bounds to the leash. but they would not answer her bidding; and the more she saw of Philip, the more she valued the genius that, as a wayward girl, she had cast aside.

Philip returned home, well-surfeited with honors, and was received like a hero fresh from victory. The neighbors were delighted; and now that their representative had proved that there was something in him, they all began to imagine that they had the fashioning of him. And Philip smiled quietly as he thought what a piece of patchwork he would have been, had these worthy people all had a hand in Philip Norham considered it his duty to call upon his old acquaintance, for as Ishe oft n passed him in her carriage it would have been awkward not to do so, and he evidently thought it his "duty' to follow up this call with others; but as he was known not to be a visiting man, people began to look knowing, and wonder 'when it would be? But Mrs. Keywood was always so surrounded by a throng of visitors that Philip had scarcely a chance of approaching her; and, at last, he despatched a note requesting a few minutes private audience.

Widows have the especial perogative of comprehending such things at a glance; and that day Mrs. Keywood was occupied in making some very singular preparations, and giving orders which servante not so well-trained as hers would have pronounced strange.

Philip pondered, as he went along: upon his singular trepidation in addressing Mrs. Keywood, when he had felt the very same emotion respecting Clara Ledsted; but there was the old house directly before him, and every circumstance connected with that well-remembered evening rose up distinctly.

He was conducted to a side-room, and the passage seemed familiar. Through the open door the bright blaze of a wood firea kettle hung in the old place and he stood in the well-remembered kitchen .-He looked around for Clara; and the chair was well-filled by the more substantial

Upon arriving at Old Point, the Army officers and Fortress Monroe Band were taken on board and added much to the delightful excursion. A beautiful speaking trumpet was presented to Capt. Should your views coincide with those herein expressed, be pleased to forward your name, together with the names of such other reliable men in your neighborhood as you may select, to James Kidd, Esq., of this city, without delay, that they may be printed with the address.

By order of the Committee, FRANCIS GRANGER!

This movement (says the Bichmond Enquirer) is of very little interest to us of the South ; for, in the first place, it contemplates the restoration of the Whig party on the basis of opposition to the Nebraska Bill; and, in the second place, it must result in a ridiculous failure. Considering that the great issue between the North and the South is the reinstatement of the Missouri restriction, one would think Mr Francis Granger could not claim much sympathy of us in behalf of his desperate enterprise. For desperate we must regard it when we recollect the power of Seward and the strength of the Auburn organiza-

It is absurd in these days to talk of basing any stable political organization on 'the principles of the Whig party." Those principles, one and all, are obsolete; and other living, urgent issues press upon the public mind. The "National" Whigs of New York may take some heart from the disgraceful defeat of Clark, and the Saratoga ticket, but this experiment to revive the Silver Grey organization of 1848, will simply serve to illustrate their impotence. The only hope of making head against Sewward, rests on the possibility of restoring

H. C. Snow, of Groton, having testified for the government, Mr. Butler, on crossexamination, asked bim the following

Do you belong to a Sceret Society popularly ealled Know Nothings? Mr. Snow having denied that he did, and stoutly persisting in the denial, the questien was put in a different form when ie was finally driven to the wall, and asked leave of the Court to consult counsel. The liberty was politely granted by Judge Bishop, who gave the Jury a recess of ten minutes on account of the delay.

When Mr. Snow again took the stand, the question was again asked, -upon which he promptly replied: I cannot answer that question without criminating myself, and subjecting myself to punishment. Again and again was the question urged by the ingenious counsel for the defendant, every ime assuming some new form, but being the same fearful visage to this disciple of the secret order, until, at last, having detained the court more than two hours, and exhausted everybody's patience he replied,

Ones. How long have you belonged o H? Ans. About four or five months. Q. Is it a secret society? A. It is. Q. Did you take any oath, or obligation, is joining that society? A. I did take an obligation. Q. Was it in form of an oath? A. I do not know. Q. How was it administered to you-did you hold up your hand, when it was administered? A. I did. Q. Did you call upon God to witness the obligation. A. I think I did. So help me God, were the last words. Q. Are there different degrees in that society? A. There are. Q. How many have you taken? A. Two. Q. Does Dr Norman Smith (a witness in this case) him at the meetings. Q. Have you ever seen John A. Gardner (another witness) at the meetings of the society? A. nave. Q. Have you ever seen Dea. John Pingree (another witness) at the meetings of the society? A, I have. Q. What is the form of the institution? A. I shall not tell, as it will criminate me, and exose me to punishment. Here the Court remarked to the witness es that he had a right to protect himself If he had taken an oath contrary to the law he was not bound to criminate himelf. But, said Judge Bishop, this is a startling revelation, that men take obligations in secret societies, which are regarded by them as of higher authority than those lministered in this Court.

A. M. Gage was then called. He tesfied in a frank, humorous manner that he once joined the order, but left it some three months ago. Mr. Butler called his attention to an exposition of the oath, published in the Boston Post, of Oct. 25th which Mr. Gage seemed to think was about the kind of an oath administered to him, though he did not remember exactly. From his testimony, we judge he had be come disgusted with the order, and exposed its secrets without any misgivings. Dr Norman Smith called. Q. Do you belong to a secret society, opposed to aliens?

. I do, to a society which is calculated to exercise a political influence. Q. Does it not also exercise a religious influence? A. Some think it does. Q. Can a Roman Catholic join that society? A. Not if he is a foreigner. Can he if he is Can he if his wife is a Catholic, and he a Protestant? A. No. Q. What is the object of the society?

The Dr., drawing himself up to his full height, and extending in a statesman-like manner his right arm, replied with great Resolved, That the said committee are elequence, 'To protect our liberty, sir!' at authorized to present this subject to the the same time bringing his right hand, with consideration of such other Southern and great violence, down upon the judge's bench every article of Southwestern States, as they may think and making the court house echo with will be disposed to co-operate in this en- the sound of his hand, as well as the music that may be called for, at the stortest notice, of

GENERAL SELECTIONS.

WHERE DO MEN GO WHO DIE AT CHICAGO.

Some years ago when Chicago was in her infarcy, a stranger took up his quar-ters at the principal Hotel, and inscribed his name on the register as 'Mr. J_, of St. Louis' For several days he remained there, engaged in transacting the business which had brought him to the place, and from his exceedingly plain dress, manners, and general appearance attracted but little attention.

Soon Mr. - was suddenly seized with illness; during which he was sadly neglected by his host; and the servants, taking their tone from the master of the house, left him to shift for himself as he best could. Thus matters went on, till one morning he was found past praying for. His papers were then examined, that the said intelligence might be communicated to his friends; when, to the surprise of all, he was found to be one of the wealthiest men in the western country.

Arrangements were accordingly made for the funeral; but, before the last rites were performed, the subject came to life again, having been the victim of catalepsy instead of the 'grim King of Terrors.'-All were overjoyed at his fortunate escape from so dreadful a fate, and from that time were profuse in their expressions of solitude, elicited, however, if we may be judges, by 'documentary evidence, rather than by any personal regard.

At length some one ventured to ask how things appeared to him in his trance; to which he thus replied:

me a jewel to serve as a pass to the other side. On giving this to the ferryman I me forward another stage in my journey. Going on thus for several stages, receiving at the termination of cach a ticket for the the Academy. succeeding one, I at last reached the gate of the Heavenly City. There I found St. Peter, who opened the door at my summons, pipe in mouth, seated by a small table, on which stood a goodly mug of steaming hot whiskey toddy.

'Good morning sir,' said he, very politely.

'Good morning, St. Peter,' said I. 'Who are you sir, where did you live down below?

'I lived at St. Louis, in the State of Missouri.' 'Very well, sir, and now tell me where you died.'

'I died at Chicago, Illinois.' 'Chicago!' said he, shaking his head, there is no such place, sir?

'I beg your pardon, St. Peter, but have you a map of the United States here?"

'Yes sir.'

' Allow me to look at it.'

'Certainly, sir.'
With that he handed down a splendid atlas, and I pointed out to him Chicago on 'All right, sir,' said he, after a mo

My stock of Ladies' Goods were selected with great care, and I flatter myself that an examina-tion of them will please all who wish any thing in that line, both as regards quality and price.
The Ladies, are requested to give me a call and judge for themselves. Where the stock is large I think it useless to enumerate. Suffice to say that I have a splendid assortment, from Calico at 3 cents, to the most magnificent Silks. THE GENTLEMEN'S

Department is well supplied, and all can be suited from Kentucky Jeans to the finest English, French and American Broad Cloths and Cassimeres. I have also a beautiful assortment of BOOTS, SHOES, HATS, CAPS, and a fine assortment of Ready Made Clothing. As a village store is expected to have every thing in it, thave a good lot of Saddles, Bridles, Martingales, and a fine set of Harness, all of which will be disposed of at a moderate price.

I have a large and fresh supply of all kinds of

I have a large and fresh supply of all kinds of GROCERIES, in fact, there is nothing wanting by either Lady or Gentleman, but what can be found at JONES on the corner.

I return my thanks to the citizens of the Town and country for their very liberal support since I first opened last Spring, and respectfully solicit a continuance of the same. I will be happy at all times to show my goods to all who wish to evamine them.

ISLAND AND LOW GROUND LAND

in Martin County, lying on the Roanoke, about three miles from Williamston, containing about TWO THOUSAND ACRES.

There are about 500 acres of cleared land a large portion of it fertile, and all of it easily accessible to the means of high improvement. The Island tract is well adapted to the culture of cotton, and on it is a valuable lot of CYPRESS TIMBER. It is a Farm well worth the attention of capitalists. We consider it nanecessary to be more minute in the description of this valuable property, as all who may desire to purchase will want to make an examination. The terms will be made known on the day, but they will be liberal. Any person who desires to look at the premises will be attended to by the overseer on the plantation, D. W. Bailey, or on application he plantation, D. W. Bailey, or on application James B. Slade or either of us.

FAMILY GROCERY!!

THE SUBSCRIBER BEGS LEAVE RESPECTthe public, that he has purchased the interest of his late partner and will hereafter conduct the GROCERY BUSINESS in his own name.

He will continue to keep constantly on hand large and well selected stock of Family Groceries-Flour, Bacon, Lard, Sugar, Tea, Coffee, Butter, Molasses, Cheese, Soap, Candles, &c., &c., including every article usually to be found in well kept Grocery establishment, together with a full and choice supply of Confectionaries, Preserves, Fruits, Fancy Articles, &c., &c., to all of which he respectfully calls the attention of those in want, with the assurance that no pains will be spared on his part to furnish such articles and at such prices as cannot fail to give satisfaction. He especially solicits a continuance of the liberal patronage bestowed upon the late firm, as well as that of the public generally.
S. S. DAVIS.

TO OUR FRIENDS AND PATRONS. IN presenting ourselves to our patrons and the public at this time, we again have to acknowledge our obligations for the friendly and liberal manner in which we have been sustained. At no time of our business career, which is now of three years' standing, have our prospects been more flattering. We always have and ever shall en-deavor to square our business principles by jus-tice, equity and truth. We are well aware that a prosperous and respectable business cannot be done unless inducements are offered; these we have offered, and will continue to offer. We desire to prosecute our business in such a manner pleasure and satisfaction to ourselves as well as essential advantages to the community at large. We much regret that circumstances have prevented us from establishing facilities nch as the present wants of our customers and 13 public demand. We have been and are conanually doing what our position and resources will warrant in perfecting our means of supply, and appropriate annually a reasonable proportion of our net profits for that object; we being determined that our establishment shall not degenerate for the want of care and attention, and shall ever be the most thorough and perfect of its kind in this state.

If life and health are permitted, and success attend our exertions, we hope to be able to show an establishment in a few years that will be an honor to ourselves and a monument to the good old city that gave us birth.

GRANT'S PATENT PREMIUM GRAIN CRADLES. THE subscribers are sole agents in this city for these superior Cradles. Farmers in want of a good article, can safely rely on strong and substantial, as well as light and easy cutting implements. The fingers are bent from young white oak and hickory, and have set screws for adjusting the Fingers to the Sneath. By this arrangement they can be altered in less than a minute, and no danger of losing wedges, &c., which are generally used on the common article. Each Finger has a separate wire running through the Sneath, making it strong and independent of being the best CRADLE ever offered to the pub-We have been selling them for two seasons past, and our sales are increasing each year to a considerable extent. Our supply for the ensuing season will be received direct from the maker, and Patentee, and all orders (which should b sent in early,) will be filled at his prices.

The BLADES attached to these Cradles are made expressly for them, and under his supervision, so that they may not lose their reputation by an inferior Blade. Price for 5 Fingered These Cradles are of different lengths, to suit Wheat and Oats. The Orders directed to us, will be filled promptly. When six or more Cradles are waned for any one order, a deduction in price is
